HEAD TO MYSTIC FOR A SLICE OF HEAVEN

We learned a lot of things from Donald Petrie's 1988 sister act: That it's OK not to want to get married, even if you love the guy. That a certain type of man can't tell the difference between "babysitter" and "mistress," despite his Ivy League education. That beating the boys at pool is just about the coolest thing you can do, ever. But, curiously enough, not what was in Leona's special sauce. BUST magazine and Strong Female Lead host this screening of Mystic Pizza, in which Julia Roberts, Lili Taylor, and Annabeth Gish play the fierce and frustrated Arujo sisters, a trio of ladies dating and waitressing in small-town Connecticut, fending off guys who are unworthy of their whip-smart quips. Over 25 years later, it's still one of the most feminism-forward rom-coms on the market. Grab a slice and enjoy it with your gals. WHO YOU GONNA CALL?

WHY WE ALL NEED A CRIMINAL LAWYER

Last time we saw Saul Goodman, he was fleeing the Heisenberg-induced madness to a new life in Nebraska. But lucky for us, we'll get to see him for the first time...again. In the chronology of the Breaking Bad universe — that place where all of New Mexico is a hyper-saturated orange hue — AMC's upcoming Better Call Saul takes place six years before Walter White cooked up his first batch. Tonight, get a sneak peek at this highly anticipated origin story that creator Vince Gilligan said "started as a joke" but ended up as a spin-off, on the table as early as Breaking Bad's third season. Bob Odenkirk, the dirty lawyer himself, will discuss the new series with Jonathan Banks (Mike! Alive again!) and Michael McKean, who will play Saul's brother. Accept the charges, because this is one call you can't afford not to take. At 8, 92Y, 1395 Lexington Avenue, 212-415-5500, 92y.org, $15-$51 HEATHER BAYSIA

CONCERTS FOR THOSE WITH GOOD TASTE

Ever since it got cozy with the High Line in 2009, Chelsea Market has solidified its status as the classiest shopping mall that ever there was — where else can you pry into top-notch lobster while enjoying the sprawling vistas of an Anthropologie store? It also houses the Food Network studios, which would surely make it a foodie's paradise if the shops peddling artisanal cheeses, crepes, wines, and other vaguely French-sounding stuff didn't already. It's a place you want to hang out long after you're finished ingesting, and now you can. Tonight marks the launch of Chelsea Nights: A Concert Series, in which Brooklyn's Paper Garden Records will present its budding talent. Openers include Salt

Cathedral, Little Strike, and Stranger Cat, who combine the earthy sounds of harp and tambourine with out-of-this-world synth lines. At 6:30, first Friday of every month, Chelsea Market, 75 Ninth Avenue, 212-652-2110, chelseamarket.com, free HEATHER BAYSIA

SPEAK EASILY AND CARRY A BIG SWIZZLE

Rumored to be owned by Al Capone in the 1920s, Webster Hall became famous as the "Devil's Playhouse," known for its risqué events at the height of Prohibition. This afternoon the club is bringing those heady days back for the third annual East Ville Des Folies, a speakeasy-style beer and whiskey tasting. Wet your beak in hard-to-find hooch amid four floors of
